

Summary of ECD Global Alliance chat held on Saturday 18th June 2011

6 Present

- One patient who has a rash on his leg has been referred to a dermatologist. The rash is very itchy and is causing some discomfort.
- Another patient on the chat described a skin condition which they said looked like a rash but was probably not. It was described as patches of blood (?) under the skin and it does not itch. It started with one dime sized blotch, and then more blotches appeared until they covered about 80% of the body. They are redder with heat and paler in the cold. The patient has had twenty biopsies but these have not produced any useful information. The patient is convinced the blotches are linked to ECD but there has been no confirmation of this.
- The next chat will be held on Saturday 25th June 2011 at 3pm EST.
